From the Pastor's Desk

Wisdom can be an elusive element in making human choices. Each of today's readings offers perspective on wisdom. The author of the Book of Wisdom begs the question, "Who can know God's counsel [wisdom] or who can conceive what the Lord intends?" The answer is, of course, no one. In fact, the author states, even humans are not sure of their own plans, let alone those of God. But God chooses to bestow wisdom on people and it is this divine gift that allows "those on earth" to choose wisely.

The wisdom in Jesus' teaching is twofold. First, those choosing to follow Jesus need practical wisdom. They will have to leave behind whatever distractions would hinder them from accepting the mission he desires for them. They will need to discern what it will take for them to "finish the work" of discipleship, as workers need to do when completing a construction project.

The second wisdom is a deeper sense of commitment, a choice that will mean following Jesus as their first priority in life and relationships. The word hating that appears in the translation should not be understood in the same sense that we associate with despising another. Jesus never advocated hatred, always love. He impresses upon his listeners that following him is a radical choice, and will take great spiritual courage.

In his letter, Paul writes about Gospel wisdom. He appeals to Philemon, the owner of Onesimus the slave, in the spirit of brotherhood that comes from the shared mission they have in Christ Jesus. He implores Philemon to put aside his former way of relating to Onesimus, as an owner, and to accept him as he would accept Paul, in a spirit of partnership. The wisdom of God comes to us both as gift and as responsibility.
